war the country has known did not go so far as to prohibit pipe lines from handling their own oil.

Wouldn't Hurt Standard.

The Kansas Legislature did not attempt to prohibit pipe line companies carrying their own oil because it knew that such a provision would be ruinous to the industry.

Such a provision would have simply ruined the market. The proposed legislation, Senator Long insisted, would not injure the Standard Oil Company at all because the Standard Oil Company at all because the Standard Oil Company at all because the Standard Would divorce the ownership of its refineries from the ownership of its refineries from the ownership of its pipe lines and thus leave itself free to handle its own oil without violating the law; but the independent pipe lines would be unable to buy oil for transportation through its own pipes and thus would be practically forced out of business.
